

YOU, MY Safe Place

A decorative graphic consisting of two red hearts on the left, a red wavy line extending from the first heart towards the right, and two small red hearts at the end of the line.

Ms. Nigar Begum

Dear Chandan Kumar & Ms. Nigar Begum,

Thank you so much for letting Yell Your Love be a part of your journey in creating something special for your Journey.

We are truly grateful for the opportunity to craft a personalized book that celebrates your friendship and connection.

Friendship is one of life's most precious gifts, and we're honored to help capture the essence of their bond in a way that will be treasured for years to come.

We wish you a lifetime filled with joy, laughter, and unforgettable memories as they continue to grow together.

Here is to a love that will always bring them happiness and strength!

With heartfelt thanks and warm wishes,
Yell Your Love

CONTENT

- 1.How It All Began
- 2.The Habit of Him
- 3.The Little Things
- 4.When It Started Feeling Different
- 5.The Realization
- 6.The Silence Between Us
- 7.The Distance That Stayed
- 8.I Missed You
- 9.The Moment I Saw You Again
- 10.My Happy Place

If this book ever finds an end, it won't be because our story is over...

It will be because words fell short of a bond that never does.

DEDICATION

*To the one who has walked beside me since the innocence of childhood, who became my courage, who stayed, who understood, who became my strength without asking when I didn't even know
I needed one my pillar, my forever safe place...*

CHANDAN KUMAR

Chapter 1

How It All Began

*Not every beginning is loud....
Some start quietly, and changes everything...*

Chandan was never ordinary to me. Not even on the first day. I don't know what it was... maybe the way he spoke, maybe the calm in his presence, or maybe something my heart understood before I did, but he was special. From the very beginning. It started with something so simple... just one word... "Hi"

His first message. I remember staring at my phone for a second, wondering who it could be. There was no name saved, no hint, no familiarity.

"Who is this?" I replied, casually... not knowing that this one question was about to change everything. "It's me, Chandan".

And just like that something shifted. A conversation began.. A conversation formed... A story... quietly found its first line. I didn't know then—that this "Hi" would become my favorite notification, that this stranger would become my safe place, and that this small beginning... would turn into something I'd never want to end.

I still remember the first time I heard his voice. It wasn't anything extraordinary to the world.... Just a simple "Hello" But to me, warm, soft and Familiar... in a way I couldn't explain...It didn't feel like I was talking to someone new...It felt like I had known that voice forever... And that was the moment something quietly shifted inside me... What started as small conversations... never really stayed small. We didn't just text. We talked...Long landline calls that stretched for hours, where time didn't matter and neither did the world outside....And that was the moment something quietly shifted inside me. Messages throughout the day... Random conversations about nothing and everything... And slowly He became a habit I never wanted to break. But then came the day I saw him. For the first time. It was a simple coffee shop. Nothing fancy. Nothing unforgettable. At least... that's what I thought. Until he was already sitting there. He came with his friend. Remember noticing him instantly...like my eyes just found him without trying.

He looked around, calm and composed, and then his eyes met mine. And he said 'Aaja baithja' and for a second... Everything else disappeared... He was different. There was something about the way he carried himself... The way he sat effortlessly stylish, yet so comfortable. The way he spoke polite, gentle, never trying too hard.

And his eyes...They were gorgeous. Not just in the way they looked...but in the way they felt. Warm. Kind. Observing everything. He smiled. And then he laughed. Loud... free... beautiful... The kind of laughter that doesn't just stay in the air..it stayed with me...I noticed everything... The way he listened carefully when I spoke. The way he made sure I was comfortable. The way he paid attention to the smallest details Like it mattered....There was a quiet care in him. A protective energy.. Not loud. Not obvious...But safe...So safe...And in that moment... sitting across from him, listening to his voice, watching him smile like the world was simple I felt something I couldn't explain. It wasn't just comfort. It wasn't just happiness. It was something deeper. Something my heart recognized... before I had the courage to name it. From that day... Everything changed. The calls felt closer.

The messages felt warmer. His presence felt necessary. Every Good morning... before my day even began... Everything felt right... I never questioned why it mattered so much.... Why his voice stayed in my mind long after the calls ended. Why his laughter echoed in my thoughts. Why his presence... felt like home... Because the truth was... Chandan was never just my best friend.. Not from the first call...Not from the first message. Not from the first time I saw him sitting across me... smiling like that. He was my comfort. My habit.

My favorite part of every day. My safe place. And maybe That's where it all began. Not with love I understood...But with a feeling I could never let go...

Chapter 2

The habit of him

"Some people don't try to be special... they just are, in the simplest ways."

If I had to describe Chandan in one word... I wouldn't be able to. Because he wasn't just one thing. He was... everything good, in the most effortless way. He was simple. Not the kind of simple that lacked depth but the kind that made life feel easy. No complications. No unnecessary drama. Just a calm presence that made everything around him feel lighter. He was a businessman. Focused. Ambitious. Hardworking. The kind of person who knew what he wanted in life... and quietly worked towards it without needing to prove anything to anyone. But what made him different was. He never let success change him. He was humble. So humble, it almost surprised me. For someone who had so much going for him... he never carried pride in his words. Never made anyone feel less. Never tried to show off. Instead...He listened. He understood. He respected. He had this rare quality. He never judged. Not my overthinking. Not my moods. Not my silence. Where the world questioned... He accepted. And maybe that's why I felt so safe with him. Because with Chandan... I didn't have to explain myself. I could just be.

He believed in family. Not just in words... but in the way he lived. The way he spoke about them. The way he respected them. The way he carried their values within him...It showed. His values are truly precious especially when it comes to his family. The way he respects women reflects the beauty of his upbringing... He is my ultimate sukoon... the peace my heart seeks and the calm my soul finds....And it made me admire him in ways I never said out loud. He was caring. Not loudly. Not in ways that demanded attention. But in the smallest, quietest gestures.

“Did you eat?”

“Reach home and text me.”

“Don’t overthink so much.”

Simple words. But when he said them... They felt like protection. And he was protective. Not controlling. Not possessive. Just... protective in a way that made me feel like I mattered. Like someone was looking out for me... even when I didn’t ask. There was a class to him. Not just in the way he dressed or carried himself... But in the way he treated people. With respect. With patience. With dignity. And then...There was his laughter. Loud. Carefree. Beautiful. The kind that filled silence... and somehow stayed in my mind long after it faded. I don’t know when it happened. When noticing him became feeling him.

When admiring him became needing him. When his presence became something my day depended on. Maybe it was always there. Maybe I just didn't realize it. Because somewhere between his simplicity... his kindness... his quiet care...He became more than just a part of my life. He became my habit. My comfort. My safe place. And the most dangerous part? He had no idea.

Chapter 3

The Little Things

*It's never the big moments...
it's always the little things that make you fall.*

It wasn't anything grand. No dramatic confessions. Just...Little things. Conversations that didn't mean much...but somehow meant everything. Random teasing. Endless laughter. Silences that never felt awkward. We had our own world. A world made of songs, jokes, and moments no one else would understand. Bollywood songs were our thing. Especially those soft, emotional ones. The kind that stay with you long after they end. Songs from Jannat... the ones that felt like love, even when no one said it. Sometimes he would hum a line... sometimes I would send him a song... And somehow, without saying it directly it felt like we were speaking through those lyrics.

"Why do you always send such emotional songs?" he once asked. I smiled.

"Because they're nice.

" But the truth was...They felt like him. And then there was my favorite thing, Teasing him. "You know... you actually look like Ranbir Kapoor," I said once trying to sound serious. He paused.

“Really?” he asked. I nodded, holding back a smile. “Hmm... same charm.” For a second, he just looked at me... And then, He laughed. That loud, effortless, beautiful laugh. The one I could listen to forever.

“Pagal ho kya?” he said, still laughing. And I laughed with him. But inside... I meant every word. That was us. Simple. Easy. Real. There was no jealousy. No complications. No fear. Just a comfort that felt unbreakable. Until one day... Something felt off. He didn’t text. No “morning” message. No calls. No replies. At first, I ignored it.

“Maybe he’s busy,” I told myself. But hours passed. Then more. And suddenly... The silence felt louder than anything. I called. Once. Twice. Again. No answer. That’s when something inside me shifted. A kind of restlessness I had never felt before. Without thinking much... I went looking for him. Near his office. Hoping I’d just see him somewhere... standing, walking, existing. Just so I could feel okay again. But he wasn’t there. Or maybe... I just couldn’t find him. And then, My phone rang. It was him.

“Where are you?” he asked. I told him. There was a pause. “Stay there,” he said. “ I’m coming.” And just like that... Everything felt okay again.

A few minutes later... I saw him. Walking towards me. A little rushed. A little tired. But still... him. He came closer and handed me something. A chocobar ice cream. "For you," he said casually. I looked at it... then at him.

"You disappeared the whole day... and this is your apology?"
I asked, trying to sound annoyed.
He smiled slightly.

"Work tha... busy tha," he said.
"But you were calling... so I came."

It was such a small moment. So simple. So ordinary. He didn't stay long. He was in a hurry. Business calls. Responsibilities. Work waiting for him. But he still came. And somehow... That meant everything. I stood there, holding that ice cream... watching him leave... and feeling something warm settle inside my heart.

Not because of what he said. Not because of what he did. But because... Even in his busiest moment... He chose to come For me. And maybe that was the moment I realized. It's never about big gestures. It's always the little things.

Chapter 4

When It Started Feeling Different

Some people don't just become a part of your life... they become a part of how you survive it.

"Somewhere along the way...Our friendship stopped feeling like just friendship. It became a habit. Not the kind you can control. The kind you need. Every day started with him. Every thought somehow ended with him. If something good happened. I wanted to tell him. If something went wrong. I needed to tell him. And then came the day... I needed him the most. I was in my 10th grade. Result day. The kind of day that decides everything... or at least, that's what it feels like. I still remember my hands shaking as I looked at the result. And then It hit me.

I had failed in math. For a second... everything went silent. The noise around me faded. People talking... reactions... everything blurred. All I could feel was one thing. Disappointment. In myself. And without thinking... I picked up my phone. And called him. He answered.

"Hello?" I didn't say anything at first. And then... I broke. "I failed..." I said, my voice trembling. And then I couldn't stop. I cried. And cried.

$$4\left(\frac{4}{7}x - 2\right) - 5 = 6x - 4$$

$$\frac{16}{7}x - 8 - 5 = 6x - 4$$

$$\frac{16}{7}x - 13 = 6x - 4$$

$$\frac{16}{7}x - \frac{42}{7}x = 9$$

$$\frac{-26}{7}x = 9$$

$$x = \frac{-63}{26}$$

And cried. I wasn't even making sense.
Words were breaking between tears.
Sentences unfinished. Breath uneven. But he didn't interrupt. He didn't rush me. He just... Stayed.

"Hey, it's okay," he said softly.
"No, it's not okay..." I cried.
"Everyone's going to be disappointed...
I'm so stupid..."

There was a pause. And then his voice came again.
Calm. Steady.

"Listen to me," he said. "You're not stupid."
I stayed silent, still crying.
"It's just one subject," he continued.
"It doesn't define you. Not your effort, not your future... nothing."

The way he said it... It didn't feel like he was just trying to make me feel better. It felt like he meant it.

"People fail, " he said.
"It happens. But you? You're stronger than this."
I don't know how long that call lasted.
Minutes... or hours. But he stayed the entire time.
Through my crying. Through my silence. Through everything. He didn't let me feel alone. Not even for a second.

"Stop crying now," he said gently after a while.

“I’m here, okay?”

And somehow... That was enough. We didn’t meet that day. There was no hug. No physical presence. But the way he comforted me... It was more than I ever expected. Because sometimes... It’s not about being there physically.

It’s about making someone feel like they’re not alone. And that day... He didn’t just comfort me. He held me together Through his words. Through his voice. Through his presence. That’s when I realized something. Something I couldn’t ignore anymore.

He wasn’t just my best friend. He was my comfort zone. My peace. My strength... on my weakest days. And maybe... That’s when everything changed. Because when someone becomes the person you run to... without even thinking. That’s not just friendship anymore. That’s something deeper. Something dangerous. Something that feels like... I don’t know how to put words in ..

Chapter 5

The Realization

Sometimes love doesn't arrive suddenly...

it slowly reveals itself in the spaces that start to feel empty. Then days passed. Slowly. Silently. Almost without notice. And somewhere between those days... Things began to change. The landline calls... They started reducing. From hours... to minutes... and then... to sometimes. Phone calls became rare. Messages... shorter. Conversations... lighter.

Nothing was said. No fight. No reason Just... A quiet distance. And then... That phase ended. The landline period faded away. And a new world began. Facebook. It was my first time there. A new space. New people. New curiosity. And the first thing I did? I searched for him. Chandan.

And there he was. I still remember that picture. He was sitting in his office...wearing a checked shirt. Simple...Classy. Charming... as always. I stared at that picture longer than I should have. Not because it was just a photo... But because it felt like I was seeing him again.

After a distance I didn't know how to explain. We started chatting there. Small messages. Simple talks. But somehow...It felt new again. I started noticing everything. His status updates. His posts. The little things he shared. Without realizing...I began keeping track of him. And then...My favorite thing returned.

“Chandu... tu toh same to same Ranbir lagta hai,” I texted once. There was a pause. And then “Pagal hai kya?” he replied. I smiled. Because to me... He really did. Every time I watched a Ranbir Kapoor movie...I didn't just see the screen. I saw him. His smile. His expressions. That same charm. And without even realizing... I would smile. I would blush.

“Yaar... my friend looks exactly like him,” I would tell my friends. They would laugh. But I meant it. Every single time. Because Chandan wasn't just someone I knew. He was someone my heart recognized everywhere. And his smile... It was still the same. Adorable. Effortless. The kind that could fix my mood without even trying. But somewhere deep inside... Something had changed. The distance. The reduced conversations. The way I started missing him more than before. That's when it hit me. Not suddenly. Not loudly. But quietly... and undeniably.

I wasn't just attached to him. I was in love with him. Not the kind you say out loud. Not the kind you confess easily. The kind that lives in your thoughts. In your habits. In the way someone becomes a part of your everyday life... even when they're not around as much anymore.
And maybe...

That's when I understood the truth. He wasn't just my safe place anymore. He was the one I was afraid of losing.

Chapter 6

The Silence Between Us

"Sometimes it's not distance that hurts..."

It's the moments you weren't there when you should have been." As time passed... Life started moving faster. We both got busy. I was in college.

New surroundings.

New people.

New responsibilities.

Trying to adjust, trying to grow...

Trying to become something...

And Chandan...

He was busy building his world. His business. His responsibilities. His dreams. Somewhere between my classes and his work... We drifted. Not completely. But enough to feel it. The calls became rare. Messages became occasional. And slowly... Silence started taking space between us. Until one day... Out of nowhere... He called me. My phone rang. His name flashed on the screen. But I was busy. Caught up in something that felt important at that moment. And for the first time... I didn't pick up his call. I thought I'd call him back later.

But “later” never came. Days passed. Then weeks. Then months. And somehow... That one missed call got lost in time. Until one day... I called him. We spoke normally. Like nothing had changed. Like the distance didn’t exist. And then... He said something. So casually... like it didn’t carry the weight it actually did.

“I had called you a few months ago,” he said. I paused. “I know... I was busy... I couldn’t pick up...” I replied. There was a small silence. And then he said, “My dad expired... I called to tell you.”

For a second... I couldn’t breathe. Everything inside me froze.

“What...?” I whispered. But he had already said it. Calmly. Normally. Like he had already accepted it. Like he had already gone through the pain... alone. And me? I wasn’t there. That one call. The only call I didn’t answer. And it was that call. Guilt hit me all at once. Heavy. Sharp. Unbearable.

I held myself together on the call. I didn’t break down. I didn’t let him hear the storm inside me. But inside... I was shattering. He was so close to his father. I knew that.

I had seen it in the way he spoke about him. In the respect... the love... the quiet pride. And when he needed someone... When he needed me... I wasn't there. I'm To listen. To comfort. To hold him... even if just through words. I wasn't there. Even now...

When I think about it... There's a heaviness that never leaves. A guilt that stays. Because no matter how much time passes... Some things don't fade.

And this? This is one of them. To this day... I wish I could go back. Pick up that call. Hear his voice. Be there for him. I wish I could have hugged him tightly... and told him.

"You're not alone." Because he was strong. I know he was. He handled everything with a strength I always admired. But even the strongest people need someone.

And I wasn't there. Not as a friend. Not as his safe place. And maybe... That's the silence that still lives between us. Not the distance. Not the missed conversations. But the moment I failed to be there... when he needed me the most.

Chapter 7

The Distance That Stayed

*Time changes everything... except the feelings you never truly let go of. Life moved on.
Whether I was ready or not...It did.*

My graduation got completed. A phase ended. Another began. I got busy. In my own world. My own responsibilities. My own journey.

And Chandan...He was in his world. Building his life. Chasing his dreams. Becoming everything he always wanted to be. We didn't talk much. Not like before. Not like those long calls... or endless conversations that once felt permanent.

But even in that distance... He never really left. Because whenever people asked me - "What's your biggest achievement?" I never thought twice. I would smile... and take his name. Not out loud to everyone...But inside, with pride. Because to me... He was. My biggest achievement. Not something I earned. Not something I achieved in the usual way. But something I had. A person so rare...so genuine... so unforgettable...That just knowing him felt like a blessing. Days turned into months. Months turned into years. And slowly... The Facebook era faded. Life shifted again. Instagram took its place. Another new beginning.

Another new space. And just like before... The first thing I did - Was search for him. Chandan. And there he was. Different... yet the same. Grown... yet familiar. Without thinking much... I followed him. And after some time... He followed me back. No big moment. No dramatic reaction. Just a quiet connection... finding its way back. We started talking again. Slowly. Short messages. Simple conversations. Sometimes replies came late. Sometimes not at all.

And sometimes... There were just silent messages. Seen. But not replied. And yet... It didn't feel empty. Because even in that silence... There was something that remained. A connection that time couldn't break. A bond that distance couldn't erase. We weren't what we used to be. But we weren't strangers either. We were something in between. And maybe...

That's what made it harder. Because no matter how far life took us... No matter how much time passed... He was still there. In my thoughts. In my memories. In the quiet parts of my heart...where nothing had changed....

Chapter 8

I Missed You

Time passed... but some feelings never did.
Days became weeks...

Weeks became months...
Months became years.
Life kept moving.
But somewhere in between...
We stopped meeting.

It had been so long...
Since I last saw him.
And in that long silence...
There was one feeling that never left me.
I missed him.
Not loudly.

Not in a way the world could see.
But quietly...
In moments that meant nothing to anyone else.
And everything to me.

Positive
Vibes
Only

Chapter 9

The Moment I Saw You Again

"Some moments don't just happen...they take you back to a version of yourself you never forgot."

Life moved forward again. I started working. A new phase. New responsibilities. New routines. I got busy. And so did he. But one day... Out of nowhere... I felt like talking to him again. Not just thinking about him. Not just missing him. But actually connecting. So I messaged him. Simple. Normal. But my heart...It wasn't normal. And when he replied - Happy. Warm. Just like before... I felt like I was on cloud nine. Like nothing had changed. Like time had paused just for us.

"Let's catch up," I said. But he was busy. Work. Meetings. Life. So I decided something. If he couldn't come to me... I would go to him. A surprise. I went to his office. As I entered his street...My heart started racing. And then I saw him. He walked out of his office. Wearing a deep violet shirt. And in that moment...Everything stopped. 18 years. After so many years... There he was. The same. Yet different. More mature. More confident. Still... him. His smile... Oh God... That smile. It was still the same. Still beautiful.

Still the one that stayed in my memory all these years. We met. A simple handshake. But it didn't feel simple. It felt like time folded into that one moment. Everything was so perfect. So beautiful. So... unreal. For a second...

I wasn't standing there as the person I had become. I was back. Back to our time. Our era. Our moments. And him? He was still the same charming Chandan. The one I never really stopped loving.

Chapter 10

My Happy Place

"Some people don't just come back...they become the home you never want to leave again."

We had both changed. Grown. Matured. Life had taught us things... About space. About privacy. About understanding. And yet...Some things never changed. Chandan... Was still my comfort zone. Like no time had passed. Like no distance ever existed. Once again...I insisted.

"Let's meet". This time, he said yes.
"I'll pick you up from your office." And just like that... My heart forgot how to stay calm. I was excited. Nervous. Happy... in a way I couldn't explain. And then... He came. Sitting in his car. Wearing a white shirt. His eyes sparkled like stars scattered across a quiet night sky deep, luminous, and impossible to look away from.

There was a strange calm in them, yet they held stories you'd want to spend a lifetime understanding. His face... it carried a glow brighter than the moon, as if it had its own light. A kind of noor that wasn't just seen, but felt soft, warm, and comforting in a way that made everything else fade.

He came.
Sitting in his car.
Wearing a white shirt.

And then, his smile. It wasn't just beautiful, it felt like heaven.. The kind of smile that could heal without trying, that made your heart pause for a second longer than it should. When he laughed, it wasn't loud or overwhelming. It was light, a little playful... but filled with an effortless confidence. The kind of laughter that made you feel safe, yet excited at the same time. He didn't try to stand out. Yet somehow... he always did. And for a moment..

The world faded. Even the full moon in the sky... felt like it had dimmed in front of him. Because all I could see... Was HIM.. I sat next to towards him. And before I could think...I hugged him. Tightly. Like I had been holding that hug for years. And in that moment... It felt like heaven. Without thinking...Without holding back... I kissed him on his cheek. A simple moment. But so precious. So real.

Tears filled my eyes. Happy tears. Because he wasn't just standing there... He was with me. My happy place. From that day... When he came to see me... he didn't come empty-handed. In his hands, there was a simple Dairy Milk Silk nothing extravagant, nothing overdone... yet it meant everything. He handed it to me so casually, as if it was just another small gesture. But for me... it wasn't small at all. Because it was from him...

The chocolate felt sweeter, I held it close, smiling in a way I couldn't hide. Not because of what he brought but because he thought of me. And in that moment, those little things became something so special... something I knew I would never forget. And then... a long drive. The kind where the roads feel quieter, the music feels softer, and time somehow slows down just for me.. Somewhere along the way, he stopped and ordered a veg pizza for us ...Simple. Easy. Comfortable... Just like us. As we sat there, I noticed something he didn't like olives. Slowly, without making a big deal out of it, he began picking them out one by one... carefully separating them from the pizza. It was such a small thing. But I couldn't stop looking. My eyes drifted to his face... those eyes I could get lost in, his lashes so soft, so perfect, it almost felt unfair. And then his hands... the way his fingers moved, so gentle, so precise... even in something as silly as removing olives, there was a quiet kind of beauty. I wasn't even eating anymore. I was just... staring. Lost in him.

In his little habits, in his unspoken comfort, in the way he existed so effortlessly. He was just... amazing. As always. It was just another Sunday... or at least, it was supposed to be. I was busy, lost in my own little world of work, when suddenly my phone lit up. His name. Chandan For a second, everything else stopped.

A smile found its way to my lips before I could even control it. My heart knew before my mind did it was him. I picked up, trying to sound normal... but excitement betrayed me. "Come down," he said. That was it.

No explanation. No hints. And somehow, that made it even more special. I didn't think twice. As I stepped outside, there he was... Sitting inside his car, wearing a white checked shirt, looking like he had just walked out of one of my day dreams. And in his hands a huge popcorn bucket for me. I couldn't help it...

I just stood there for a moment, smiling like a fool, my heart overflowing with a happiness I couldn't put into words. Out of all the things he could have brought, he chose something so simple... yet so us. A surprise visit. A bucket of popcorn.

And him. Sometimes, a pure bond doesn't need grand gestures. Sometimes... it just shows up, calls you downstairs, and makes your ordinary Sunday feel like magic. We started seeing each other again. And this time...

I made a decision. I wouldn't lose him again. No matter what. Because he wasn't just someone I loved.

He was my peace. My calm. My everything. He was my dil. With him I didn't feel incomplete anymore. I felt whole. His smile... His sparkling eyes... His confidence... His charm... The way he spoke... The patience he carried... The maturity he showed... Everything about him... Was beautiful. And every day...

Then we met again...We were on a long drive that day...just talking, laughing, lost in our own little world.Somewhere in between, I casually asked, "Mom kiske saath rehte hain... aapke saath ya bhaiya ke saath?" He just smiled... and said, "Main Maa ke saath rehta hoon". And I don't know why but that moment stayed. There was something so beautiful about the way he said it.

No explanation, no show just a simple truth... but it spoke so much about the kind of man he is. It wasn't just an answer. It was his values. His respect. His heart. And in that moment, I felt it again how rare he is. I felt proud... so deeply proud. And grateful to be with someone who truly knows how to love, respect, and honor a woman.

Somewhere along the way... he changed. Not in a way that felt distant, but in a way that made me look at him and smile a little more.

There was a time when his words were, “Sudharke kya karna hai?” carefree, effortless... just him being him.

And now? “Ab sudhar jao, Nigi,” he’d say with that teasing tone, that half-smile playing on his lips. I’d roll my eyes... but secretly, I loved it. Because it wasn’t just the words it was the way he said them. Playful, confident... a little possessive, a little caring. And then his laughter... Oh, his laughter.. Just... woowwww.. by the way this is his all times favourite emoji..

The kind that didn’t just stay in the air, but reached straight to my heart. The kind that made everything feel lighter, brighter... better...

I don’t know when it happened, but somewhere between his silly lines and his beautiful laugh... he became someone even more special than I ever imagined...

His words... meant a lot to me. More than I could ever explain. For 34 years of my life, no one had ever sat beside me and said, “Save money”..
“Be financially independent.”

No one ever guided me like that. But he did.

He didn't just say things he taught me. How to invest... where to invest...how to think about my future. He was there, guiding me quietly, consistently as if my growth mattered to him just as much as his own. And I believed in him. I still do. I always will. Because he is not just a man of words he is a man who stands by them. A man with dignity. A true gentleman. In a world full of temporary people, he felt rare... real... steady. And somewhere along the way, without even realizing it... He didn't just become important to me. He became my DIL  As always...

One day, out of nowhere, my phone screen shattered. It was such a small thing... just a broken screen. But in that moment, without thinking twice, I reached out to him. I asked him to help me buy a new phone. And just like that without a second thought, without a single question—he sent me the money. No hesitation. No delay. In that simple act, I felt everything... his humility, his care, his quiet way of being there for me. It wasn't about the phone. It was about the way he showed up instantly, effortlessly as if my need was already his responsibility. And in that moment, I understood...some people don't just say they care they prove it, in the most unspoken ways.

And to you Chandu.. THANK YOU..

For being there without being asked twice, for understanding me without explanations, for your quiet strength and your gentle heart.

Thank you for the way you protect, the way you give, and the way you make even the smallest moments feel so meaningful. You may not even realize how much that meant to me...but I felt it, deeply ...And I always will.. And then there was one thing he always said...something so simple, yet so powerful: “Never stop learning”..

I found myself loving him more. More than yesterday. Less than tomorrow. I loved the little things. Like how every time we met...He would bring a chocolate for me. Just to see me smile. And somehow... That meant more than anything. Now...

My mornings started with his messages again... The most beautiful part of him is his name which always flashes on my neck... his name necklace makes me feel more beautiful... when others ask me what's on your neck... I just smile and blush... “Morning...” Simple. But full of meaning. His happiness became mine. His goals became mine. His world...Slowly became mine too.

His Eid gifts...

Became special to me. Because everything connected to him... Became special. And somewhere between all of this... I realized something. I couldn't stop loving him. Not now. Not ever.

This isn't where our story ends.

THANK YOU FOR BEING THERE ALWAYS!

One fine day, he decided to come and pick me up from my office... This time, not in his car but on his bike. And wow... after 15 years, I was sitting behind him again. It felt unreal. A lovely ride... holding him tight, forgetting the world around us, forgetting that anyone might be watching. In that moment, nothing else mattered. It was so special to me... because he is so special so perfect in his own way. His presence is calm, comforting... like a place I never want to leave.

Sometimes, I feel like I could just keep looking at him for the rest of my life... and even that lifetime wouldn't feel enough. He deserves more than just my words... more than what I can ever give... He deserves all the happiness in this world...

Maybe it never will. Because some bonds don't fade with time... they grow, breathe, and stay JUST STAYS FOR EVER AND EVER! Till the very last breath, and maybe even after that... HOPE!

Chandan.... You are my safe place...

